TO DOUBLE CROP YIELD

A Hawaiian farmer is invited to the farmer who will find himself of the advantages and methods of the development of the cotton plant in the Hawaiian Islands. The farmer who will find himself of the advantages and methods of the development of the cotton plant in the Hawaiian Islands. The farmer who will find himself of the advantages and methods of the development of the cotton plant in the Hawaiian Islands.

The discovery was made in an experimental cotton plot in South Carolina. Escorting a party of farmers one day, Dr. Webber bent down and pulled up a boll of cotton. He found the floss half as long as in ordinary cotton. In the whole row of 284 of supposedly the same plants there was only this single individual with the invaluable variation. It took five years of breeding work to free the plant's descendants wholly from certain undesirable features intermixed, but finally an ample supply of seed was obtained that came true to the desired type. Now the larger part of the cotton acreage of the United States is planted with descendants of the single plant that Dr. Webber found and developed.

He told also of the development at Cornell of an improved timothy that yielded twice as much to the acre as the seed usually planted in New York. He described the development of corn that matured two weeks earlier than the varieties ordinarily used, and of successful efforts, by contests and prizes, to get the farmers to improve their seed by experimenting and selecting.

Experiments With Fruit. He told of the frost-resisting Japanese oranges, the trifoliata, which his plant-breeding experiments have developed into valuable new forms. Yields more juice than a lemon of the same weight, a juice differing much from lemon juice, but highly esteemed for culinary uses.

An interesting story of the making of good Americans out of foreigners was told in a lecture at the University of California by C. W. Blannepied, immigration secretary of the San Francisco Y. M. C. A.

While working in a factory Blannepied saw a foreman, angry at a foreign workman's inability to understand orders, strike him. When Blannepied re-narrated the foreman expressed surprise at his interest in a mere "wop."

"If you want to help him," said the foreman, "why don't you teach him to talk English?"

Blannepied in that instant saw a life-work dawn before him. He set to work. He gathered together a group of Slavonians in a room a saloon keeper put at his disposal (after a church had refused similar accommodations) and began to teach the men English. After two years' work in Tacoma he had a thousand foreigners studying English, and for teachers sixty-four college students. These foreigners were learning not only English but civics, hygiene, good citizenship, better kill for the occupations, and how to become good Americans. The students were getting just as much good as the foreigners, for they were learning about human nature, about how to deal with men, and acquiring the habit of social service, the habit of trying to make the world better through their own personal efforts.

Six weeks ago Blannepied came to San Francisco to organize a similar work in a great seaport city 72 per cent of whose inhabitants are either foreign born or children of foreign parents.

Interest in social service work is keen among many of the students of the University of California. Already a number of them have joined with Blannepied in his work.

"Movies" Have Influence. The potency of the moving picture theater in helping make foreign immigrants into good Americans was forcibly brought out in a lecture at the University of California by the Rev. Herbert Jump of the First Congregational Church of Oakland.

"Here is drama," he said, "and representations of American home life, which require no knowledge of English for comprehension."

The censorship system which prevails safeguards the character of the films shown. "One twenty-third of all the people in the country visit a motion picture theater each day," he said. "The films put out by the large companies are seen by twenty to thirty million people before they are discarded. The artistry, pure milk, and truthfulness and social justice films are the most powerful preaching done in the country. In overwhelming majority the film dramas make for goodness and kindness, virtue and courage."

Some twelve years ago, while traveling in China Dr. John Fryer Agassiz, Professor of Oriental Languages in the University of California, happened upon a young Chinese named Chin-tao, with whose intellectual ability he was greatly impressed. The acquaintance resulted in the coming to Berkeley not only of Chin-tao, but of seven other Chinese students, all of whom made excellent use of the opportunities of the University of California. Now, ten years after leaving Berkeley with his master's degree, Dr. Chin-tao
